

EACH PROJECT I START IS WORTH THE EFFORT TO COMPLETE.

Each project I am a part of benefits from my dedication. I make the effort to complete the things that I lend my talents to.

Studies are sometimes challenging but very rewarding. When I feel like giving up, I remind myself of the end result. Keeping the goal in mind helps me to keep pushing.

When I spend money to educate myself, it is important to get the full value. I know that bettering myself results in greater opportunities presenting themselves. The chance to develop keeps me focused on getting good grades.

I take the same approach to projects at work. Even though I work to earn a salary, I also work to prove my dedication. I like when my employer knows that I am reliable.

Starting a journey that I follow through to completion is a learning experience. Seeing things through to the end helps me to acquire resilience and perseverance. Those traits take me through some of life's biggest challenges.

Completion of challenges gives me a sense of accomplishment. Being victorious gives me the confidence to go after scary goals. I am ready to push through to the end.

Today, I celebrate the fact that I am a committed individual. I am happy that my dedication shines through in each venture I set my sights on tackling. My path remains promising because my positive attributes help me to be successful.

SELF-REFLECTION QUESTIONS:

1. What impact does planning have on my ability to successfully tackle a project?
2. How does a changed goal affect my dedication to completing a task?

3. How do I react when a project suddenly requires more effort than planned?
